Abstract

The theory of the public servant must understand the complete systematization of those who provide their activities to the public power, in order to achieve their high goals. Hence the concern to place them within a scheme that seems to serve exactly that. It involves the problem of classifying public servants, in their different shades, the study of the legal nature that binds them, according to the respective framework to the State. This suggests the examination of three questions: the one related to the state organism; the pertinent to public agents who are the most important servants; the one referring to the individuals who happen to exercise public functions or services, independently, without being integrated in the state organism.
